Challenge:

Capital Newspaper, a regional newspaper with three locations, was in the process of upgrading many of their critical business applications with an overall goal of ensuring these new applications were both easy to access and secure for their users. With this challenge established, they engaged Evolution to give them an overall assessment of their current environment and implement a solution that would improve delivery of their applications while ensuring a proper level of security.

Solution:

Evolution implemented a centralized access and security solution which incorporated a centrally-managed application delivery system and an overall security environment that took into consideration their complex network. This enabled Capital to support users from their centralized data center while offering the level of security the newspaper demanded.

Results:

This project has been regarded as one of the key solutions for Capital Newspaper. The staff now has the ability to do work from anywhere and still maintain the utmost level of network security necessary for the newspaper. With the complexities of the Capital Newspaper, pulling this project off was a tremendous success as the Capital IT staff has been able to maintain growth in technologies without having to add more staff. "This project – and the support and implementation from Evolution – is second to none." Brad Muller IT Manager.
